Quid Domini facient, audent cum talia fures?

To the Select Society of Grub-ſtreet.

Gentlemen,

AMONGST the many complaints of the preſent times, there's none more general than that of ſervants, eſpecially in and about the metropolis; where they are arrived to ſuch a pitch of impudence and inſolence, that their keepers are very often much at a loſs to know how to behave towards them, for fear of being offended by them, or giving them offence. Sometimes a man might be inclined to think both one and the other upon a level, and that there were no diſtinction; at others, that they had changed places by their manner of behaviour, which I ſhall not take upon me to account for in particular, but beg leave to give my opinion of it in general, which is, that I look upon it to be owing to the great decay of Religion amongſt us, to the degeneracy of both their keepers and thoſe that are kept; amongſt which laſt ſort, I am told, there's a tribe of men, that are diſtinguiſhed by the honourable title of footmen, and value themſelves much upon it, eſpecially thoſe that are attendants upon quality, who have eſtabliſhed a ſociety in town, for ſuch of them, as are turned out of their places, that are found, and allowed by the members of their body, to be men of worth and merit, i. e. that have been honourably diſcharged from their ſervice for diſobedience of their maſters and ladies commands, and behaving themſelves with ſuch ſaucineſs and aſſurance, for which they ought to be ſent to the Houſe of Correction to learn better manners. I have no intention in this, to deſpiſe them myſelf, or render their ſtation of life contemptible, which (I think) none is, that is honeſt: for providence (I am very well aſſured) might (if he pleaſed) have ſo ordered it, that it might have been yours and my lot, as well as theirs; but I have taken this opportunity by you, for I know thoſe Gentlemen, as well as others, ſometimes read news, I mean ſuch of them as can read: for there are ſome of them that bluſter, make a fine outſide ſhew, value themſelves highly upon being Gentlmen's Gentlemen, that have never gone through their Horn book. I take this opportunity, I ſay, to let them know, that ſo long as they behave themſelves well, with modeſty, ſobriety, and diſcretion, they will have as much reſpect ſhewn them, as is due to men in their condition of life, and as they can in reaſon expect. but if they go on, and continue to behave themſelves according to the rules and practice of the abovementioned Corporation, they will, and muſt expect to be looked upon as the off-ſcouring of men, and as great ſcoundrels as any upon earth. But after all, who are to be blamed for the outcrys and outrages of ſervants? Why Gentlemen themſelves, for not ſetting them better examples. Is it at all to be wondered at, that Footmen learn lewdneſs and debauchery, to drink and whore, when they ſee ſo much of their maſters time ſpent in it; who, if they are lovers of pleaſure, more than lovers of God, are more delighted with Plays and Operas, than Prayers and Sermons? Is it at all ſtrange, that their ſervants (who attend them at all their diverſions) ſhould give themſelves up to them, who imitate them in all they do. If Gentlemen and Ladies break the ſabbath, or keep it by halves (as moſt of them do) if they ſpend their time in viſits, in journeys, in diverſions, in idleneſs, and lounging about, how can it be expected their ſervants, and thoſe about them, ſhould ſhew any regard to the day, to keep it holy, as God hath commanded? And if they ſerve not him faithfully, what grounds have Maſters and Miſtreſſes to expect faithful ſervice from them? But if men are taught to ſerve God, out of a principle of conſcience, they'll ſoon learn 'tis their duty to ſerve men ſo too, and then 'twould be impoſſible to have bad ſervants amongſt thoſe that act upon ſuch a principle; for which reaſon (if there were no other) they ought to have better examples ſet them: 'till then, they muſt not expect better ſervants. This would they themſelves reſolve to do, a method might be found out, to reform the moſt refractory behaviour of the others, which would in a great meaſure be brought about by the obſervance of this one rule only, and that is, to take no ſervants without characters, and to be more conſcientious in giving them, to ſhew a greater regard to the intereſt and advantage of thoſe perſons to whom they recommend them, and not reſpect that only of the perſon recommended; if this practice were religiouſly obſerved, and Gentlemen and Ladies would give none but juſt and true characters, ſervants muſt demean themſelves after a different manner, than moſt of them at preſent do, before they could get places; and I believe their Corporation-fund would not be ſufficient to ſupply long ſo numerous a body, as they would ſoon grow to be. I ſhall conclude this with a ſpecimen of a character a Gentleman in this neighbourhood gave ſome years ago to one that had been his ſervant, and applied to him for one; 'tis as follows.

SIR,

If this fellow had had one good quality, I would not have parted with him. The Gentleman it was ſent to read it to the fellow, who came back to his old Maſter, and told him, Sir, inſtead of giving me a character, you have ruined me. 'Tis no matter, ſaith he, then you might have behaved yourſelf better.

Yours, &c.

Cambridge, May 24, 1737.

Gentlemen,

AS I was caſting my eye the other day over the Advertiſements in one of the Papers, I eſpied a moſt egregious Puff; which I therefore deſire you to take notice of. It is a new book on the Art of Dialling, correcting every thing which has been ſuperfluous, obſcure, or defective in that Art, among all the former writers on that ſubject. The Author moreover promiſes that it will teach a perſon, tho' he knew nothing of the matter before, to make a Dial on any plane whatſoever, only by the help of a ruler and a pair of compaſſes.

I would be glad to know, Gentlemen, what has been obſcure and defective in that Art of late. Were not the principles, upon which it is founded, as well known before this Gentleman wrote, as they will be by his means? If they were, how could it be obſcure, and how could any thing be defective, when once the tables of artificial Sines and Tangents were perfected? As to the ſuperfluous, every body muſt anſwer for himſelf, and have as great a ſhare of it as he pleaſes.

The next thing I would enquire is, how a perſon, who knew nothing of the Art before, can, by reading his book, be at once enabled to make a Dial for any plane whatſoever, and that only by the help of a ruler and a pair of compaſſes. This ſeems to me ſomewhat like a Grammar, publiſhed a few years ago, which was to enable a perſon, who knew nothing of the Latin Tongue before, to read and write that Language intelligibly in ſix hours time. How can a man, who never knew that the ſtile of a Dial lies parallel to the axis of the earth, know how to fix it? What notion can he have of the true place of the hour-lines, who is ignorant that they are formed by the interſection of the meridians with the plane of the Dial? How would he know, how to form the hour-lines upon a Concave, Convex, Conical or Cylindrical ſurface? Theſe, I ſuppoſe, are taught by this new book, ſince he ſays, on any plane whatſoever.

I will not be ſo ſevere as to ſuppoſe that it will teach his Ignoramus's how to deſcribe the furniture of Dials too, with all the kinds of reflecting ones. But I think this is Puff enough, to come under your conſideration.

I cannot but return the Gentleman my thanks for the latter part of his Advertiſement, in which he recommends his book to thoſe Students at the Univerſities, who would know how to make a Dial, without the trouble of reading the Mathematics; and muſt therefore deſire you to publiſh this in your Journal, in teſtimony of my gratitude.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your humble ſervant,

SCIOGRAPHICUS.

Gentlemen,

SEVERAL Treatiſes having lately been publiſhed in vindication of Tythes, I thought it might not be diſagreeable to your readers at this juncture, to lay before them ſome arguments, why the Quakers, as Chriſtians, refuſe the payment of them; contained in a poſtſcript to their ſuffering caſes, delivered to both houſes of Parliament, in the year 1709, viz.

'THAT the Scriptures ought to be a rule to us, we (the people called Quakers) believe, and in them the Apoſtle Paul repeatedly admoniſhes the Proſelyted Chriſtians not to mix legal ceremonies with the goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt; and tells the Galatians, That if they were circumciſed, Chriſt ſhould profit them nothing; for I teſtify again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor to do the whole law: and Ignatius, a Diſciple of the Apoſtles, in his Epiſtle to the Philippians, tells them, That (a) if they celebrated the paſſover with the Jews, or received the ſymbols of their feaſt, they thereby became one with theſe who ſlew our Lord and his Apoſtles.

'(b) Cerinthius and Ebion, only becauſe they would have incorporated legal ceremonies with Chriſtianity, were excommunicated by the Chriſtians of the firſt century.

'The Teſſareſdecatitæ alſo, becauſe they held that Eaſter ought to be kept according to the Jewiſh cuſtom, and that thoſe who did not ſo obſerve it, were ſubject to the ſame curſe the Jews were, who obſerved not the law of the paſſover, are tranſmitted to us by Epiphanius for Hereticks, though (c) in all other points they were orthodox: with theſe he thus argues; (d) The Moſaick curſes not only reſpect the celebration of the paſſover, but alſo Circumciſion, Tythes, and Oblations, ſo that by one curſe, they fall into many others; for thoſe are curſed who do not circumciſe, nor pay Tythes, nor go to Jeruſalem with their offerings.

'We conſcientiouſly refuſe the payment of Tythes, becauſe we believe, they were a type, figure, or ſhadow, appertaining to the Moſaical oeconomy, abrogated by Chriſt. Of this ſentiment, it is evident, Epiphanius was, when he ſaid, (e) There are types in the Law, but truth itſelf is contained in the goſpel. Going on, he enumerates four of theſe legal types, viz. Circumciſion, the Sabbath, Sacrifices of Beaſts, and Tythes, were inſtituted, ſaith he, in the law, that we might not be ignorant of the initial letter of Jeſus, which ſignifies, in the Hebrew, the tenth.

'Should Paul, Ignatius, Epiphanius, &c. appear again in the fleſh, they would, we believe, cenſure thoſe who ſupport a Chriſtian Miniſtry with Tythes, as much as they did thoſe Chriſtians that were circumciſed, kept the paſſover, or endeavoured to incorporate any legal ceremony with Chriſtianity; for it is undeniable, by Epiphanius joyning Tythes, in the preceding quotations,

'(a) Ἐί τις μὲν Ἰουδαίων ἐπιλελεῖ τὸ Πασχὰ, ἢ τὰ σύμβολα τῆ ἑορτῆς ἀυλῶν δέχεται, κοινωνὸς ἐστ τῶν ἀποκτεναύλων τὸν κυριὸν, καὶ τὰς ἀποσόλας αὐτῦ. Ignat. Epiſt. ad Philipp.

'(b) In Cerinthi & Hebionis hæreſin dilabimur, qui credentes in Chriſto propter hoc Solum à patribus anathamatizati ſunt; quod legis Ceremonias Chriſti evangelio miſcuerunt. Hier. Epiſt. ad Auguſt.

'(d) Μωσῆς-τίθησι πάσας τὰς κατάρας, ὐ μόνον περὶ Πασχῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ Περιτομῆς, καὶ περὶ Δεκαλώσεως. καὶ Προσφορῶν· ὥσε ἂν εἰ μίαι καλάραν πεφεύγασιν εἰς πολλὰς ἁυλὰς ἐνέπειραν· ἐυρεθήσονται γὰρ ἐπικαλάραλοι, μὴ περίλεμνομενοι, ἐπικαλάραλοι, μὴ ἀποδεκαλῶντες, οἱ ἐπικαλάραλοι γίνονται μὴ εἰς Ἱερυσαλὴμ ποσφέροντες. Ibid. 420.

'(e) Οἱ τύποι ἐν τῶ νόμῳ ἦσαν ἡ δὲ ἀλήθεια ἐν τῶ Εὐαγγελίω—Περιτομὴ—Σάββαλον—Πρόβατον ἀλογον θυόμενον—καὶ ἣν ἐκεῖ αποδεκάτωσις ἀσφαλιζομένη, ἵνα μὴ λάθη ἡμᾶς τὸ Ἰῶτα ἡ δεκὰς, τὸ πρῶτον ςοιχεῖον τῦ Ἰησε ὀνόματος. Epiphan. p. 19, 20.

with legal ceremonies, acknowledged by all to be abrogated; that it was his belief, Chriſtians now were no more obliged to pay Tythes, than to circumciſe themſelves, keep the Jewiſh ſabbath, or offer ſacrifices: and we believe, that if we ſhould pay Tythes, we ſhould thereby become debtor, to do the whole law, as much as if we were circumciſed, or celebrated the Jewiſh paſſover.

'If the welfare of the eſtabliſhed Church be only aimed at, we are ſubject to think it would tend to its advantage, did the Legiſlature reſtrain their Clergy, from rendering themſelves obnoxious to their moderate hearers, by their vindictive and mercileſs temper, in endeavouring the ruine of their honeſt neighbours, (becauſe they conſcientiouſly ſcruple the payment of Tythes) in putting them to forty, fifty, or ſixty pounds charge in the Exchequer, when they might have obtained their demand for ten ſhillings coſt by juſtices warrant, and with the tythe of the trouble they are at in the Exchequer proceedings.

'A Clergyman that is proud, malicious or inhumane, doth not promote the intereſt of the eſtabliſhed Church; but daily encreaſes the number of its Diſſenters: Can a religious man imagine, that a Rector or Vicar, that caſts his conſcientious neighbour into priſon, for four pence, or four ſhillings, and confines him there ſeveral years from his wife, children, and family, and takes ſixty times more than his original demand, can be a Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt? Certainly, no; ſuch actions are directly oppoſite to the precepts and practices of Our Saviour.

'Did the National Clergy duely conſider their own intereſt, no doubt they would, with us, deſire a reſtraining clauſe, that ſuch amongſt them as are of a vindictive and mercileſs temper, might not have an opportunity to gratify their revenge, and thereby tarniſh their own and their fraternities character, by methods which naturally produce the cenſure and contempt of their pious and Chriſtian neighbours.'

By advices from Charles-town in South Carolina of the 20th of April last, we learn, That they continue their preparations for their defence, in case they should be attack'd by the Spaniards. Capt. Compton in one of his Majesty's ships arriv'd off the bar of Charles town that day from Virginia. Capt. Wyndham, who commands his Majesty's ships upon the Carolina station, us'd great diligence upon the advices from Commodore Dent, and cruized off St. Augustine, to see what preparations were making by the Spaniards, and returned the 16th. There were no men of war then come up from Cuba to St. Augustine, but some troops were arrived in Brigantines and other vessels for the increase of that garrison. But the Governor of St. Augustine, by letter, assur'd Captain Wyndham, that he did not intend to molest any of his Majesty's subjects; yet some of the Spanish Indians in the woods met some of the English Indians, and kill'd one and carry'd away his gun. They also are driving up cattle to prepare provisions for the arrival of more troops. Capt. Wyndham sent into Frederica in Georgia to Capt Gascoigne, who gave him an account, that all things there were in very good order; and that the people of that island and the neighbouring forts, would make a very vigorous defence.

These advices make the people at Charles town much easier than they were. Yet as they know that the Spaniards are preparing a large squadron at the Havannah, and that they have an English renagado with them, and that they have augmented their garrison at St. Augustine. They do not entirely trust to their fair promises, but intend to go on in putting themselves into the best posture they can. And amongst others, several measures have been taken for regulating the negroes, who are both numerous and dangerous.

From the PEGASUS in Grub-street.

Gentlemen,

I Believe your intention in publishing my Discourse was very good; and therefore I think myself obliged to defend you against the aspersions of a keen Observator. He would be reveng'd of you for suffering me to correspond with you, if he knew how: but he is very wide of his design, when he says, that you are ready to publish whatsoever tends to the improvement of good Literature, how unpopular soever: he surely meant, whatsoever seems to tend, &c. for what really tends, is, and ought to be, very popular.

As to myself, I made instances in LILLY's Grammar, purely because I teach it, according to the custom of my school: he may, if he thinks proper, apply them to another: I had the chief of my learning from a Grammar not mention'd in his erudite catalogue; the name of which is as fit to knock me down, as any by him mention'd. I fancy he is one of those Quacks that advertise their capacity of compleating scholars in the Classics in two or three years: tho' I fancy his Master had full six years laborious instruction of him. However, if my Adversary thinks that I declare for the farthest way about, he must (wise man) take perhaps for an assertive. But malice generally prejudices the judgment. And after all, by compleating their scholars, is clearly meant a due understanding of the Latin and Greek Tongues, according to the custom of schools: which is a good six years work, considering the age of the persons usually under instruction. By good luck he asks but one Question; for that is enough to puzzle any man: Is it then, says he, no matter how unfit the tool, so we do but use it aright? I will endeavour to answer, when he produces one instance of a right use of an unfit tool. I am glad he resolves to write no more about the subject: I hope by that he has some charity for me. I make the same resolution. As the Discourse is become more public, than I design'd when I compos'd it, it shall shift for itself: if any real faults are found, I will observe them: if cavils assault it, I will despise them. So, Gentlemen, indulge me this time, I will trouble you no more.

Gentlemen,

Your very humble servant,

JAMES PEARCE.

Gentlemen,

LAST sunday being a very rainy day, an old Gentleman, who frequents a Coffee-house near Temple-bar, was confin'd to his chamber by the weather, and in the evening sent the underwritten lines to me, the keeper of that Coffee-house, where your Journal is constantly taken in, which, for the humour's sake, may deserve a place in your next Journal: but that is submitted by

Your humble servant,

J. L.

Sunday, June 5, 1737.

This rainy day
Turns dust to clay,
And sit at home I must:
My spirits sink,
And wank of drink
Will turn my clay to dust.

For help I press,
In this distress;
Send me a pint on sight,
Of what I use
Oft to infuse
Into my tea at night.

N. B. He drinks no small beer.

Since our last we have receiv'd Letters sign'd SOLOMON LOWE, E. O. AND PER SE AND, C. D. and one from the Ladies of St. James's, &c.
